PASADENA ROSE BOWL-JAN 1, 1931

THE GAME TODA

ECOGNIZED throughout the nation as the brilliant climax of the football season, the annual Tournament of Roses game brings together teams representing the best of the eastern and western grid forces. In to-day's game, the sixteenth New Year's contest, the University of Alabama, undefeated and untied champions of the south, meets Washington State, the undefeated and untied champions of the Pacific Coast.

champions of the Pacific Coast.

The game today is the third appearance of the Alabama eleven and the second of Washington State. Alabama defeated the University of Washington 20-19 in 1926 and came back the next year to tie Stanford 7-7. Washington State triumphed over Brown University 14-0 in the initial Tournament game, 1916.

The term East has been used generally in designating the team opposing the Pacific Coast representative but it does not necessarily hold to strict geographical location. The East has furnished eight of the competing collegiate teams, the Mid-West two and the South four. The records show the western universities have won six contests, the eastern universities four and three ended in ties. Twice during the war period Service teams competed.

WASHINGTON STATE

Behind the Works

When the whistle blasts its opening call it will be a tone of the sweetest music to the man carrying complete responsibility for today's game management. Few realize the intricate problems connected with such a task. Earl V. Foster, dynamic Washington State graduate manager, has carried the burden of general supervision from advance sale of some 85,000 reserved seats down to the organization of 3,000 ushers who personally conducted you to your designated seat. Take a look at the various scenes between these two extremes. Ticket printing, checking these ducats that each football enthusiast will be absolutely sure of his reservation, a four-way counter-check upon each order before it is mailed out, conducting approximately 25,000 automobiles, and radio and newspaper conveniences for this intersectional classic. Of more personal interest is the fact that professional medical aid is available, ambulances in case of an emergency, and a host of minor necessities.

The people viewing today's game would constitute a small city. Seating capacity of the Rose Bowl now ranks third on the Pacific Coast, and is surpassed by a small margin only by Stanford and the Coliseum. It is one of the outstanding arenas of the country.

Phenomenal, indeed, must be the care and precision of "the man with a million tasks." The school representing the Pacific Coast, after receiving the invitation to uphold Western laurels, assumes complete responsibility. Not phenomenal as compared to similar events, but surely so when a short thirty days elapse from the time of selection to the day of the big event.

The spring of 1925 saw Foster inaugurated as

JEFF COLEMAN
Business Manager, University of Alabama

EARL V. FOSTER
Graduate Manager, State College of Washington

Graduate Manager of the Associated Students of the State College of Washington. A rapid development ensued that has lifted the organization he represents to one of the most efficient and thoroughly organized in the realm of athletic management. It was Foster who interviewed Coach Hollingbery, foretold the possibilities of his personality and initiative, signed him up, and brought to Washington State a non-college graduate who now ranks among the nation's leading coaches. Foster again spoke, after delving into the future, and visualized the need of a more modern athletic plant. Not alone for varsity athletics, but intramural, too. A modern playing field, adequate crowd accommodation, and a $200,000 field house, 325x160 feet, is the latest development in Cougar circles. One of the most modern gymnasiums on the Coast was recently completed as a part of the program. Foster again played a part.

Athletic activity is not the only field of development for the ingenuous manager. Foster is a member of all student committees, offering his suggestions as they are called for, and assisting in the advancement of their enterprise.

On his own campus, Earl (as he is commonly called) is visited daily by a host of students seeking his advice on all phases of college activity. Each problem, regardless of its importance, is given the same care and judicious thought as he conducts his most important problems. It is through this guidance that the students as a group and individually have grown to rely upon the manager of their selection for a multitude of answers and it is the soundest of advice that has sent them on their way.

Put your finger on the busiest man at the University of Alabama and you have located Jefferson Jackson Coleman, business manager of athletics. Jeff grew up with the University, making both former trips to the Coast as business manager while still an under-graduate.

TODAY'S GAME

HOWARD GREER

Athletic News Director, Washington State College

Washington State today presents its finest football team in thirty-six years of gridiron competition. Perhaps finest is not the proper term, as Washington State has had many fine teams, each deserving of highest merit. But the 1930 eleven which you see today has made a brilliant record not only this year but during the last three years which have seen fourteen of these players working shoulder to shoulder.

The Cougars respect their opponent, the University of Alabama, as one of the nation's very best grid machines. A victory over the Crimson Tide today would be the highest honor in a season of many triumphs. A defeat would be no disgrace. Alabama has a team that is the pride of all Dixie and rightfully so. It is a team of sportsmen, well coached and highly developed in the art of football.

Orin E. Hollingbery, coach of Washington State, has instilled a great spirit of determination in his gridiron warriors. They may be defeated but there is no fear of them "cracking" or going to pieces. The same might be said for the 'Bama boys under Wallace Wade.

Today is an opportunity awaited by Washington State for fifteen years. It was Washington State that inaugurated the Tournament of Roses classic January 1, 1916, by defeating Brown 14-0. Since that time the Cougars have been knocking at the door several times but the ambition to again represent the West was never realized until this season.

T. M. McKNIGHT

News Director, University of Alabama

The team that represents Alabama today is the strongest ever to wear the Crimson and White, and is said by experts to be the greatest combination developed in Dixie.

Starting the season with a 45-0 victory over Howard College of Birmingham, the Tide was never headed in one of the most difficult schedules of the Southern Conference. The second game, against the University of Mississippi, started an eight game march through conference opponents, ending with a spectacular victory over the University of Georgia Thanksgiving Day.

One of the features of this year's Alabama season was the number of undefeated teams met on consecutive Saturdays. Tennessee was the first victim, dropping her first game in four years. Incidentally, it was the only game lost by her this year. The following Saturday Vanderbilt, undefeated and conquerors of Minnesota, fell before the Tide onslaught. Kentucky and Florida, both undefeated until they met Alabama, went down before Wade's powerful attack.

Alabama scored 247 points and were scored upon twice. Tennessee made the distance once with a 24 yard pass, and Vanderbilt was the only other offender, also scoring on a pass.

It has been pointed out that the Alabama attack this season was not indicative of her scoring ability. With a powerful line and a great punter, the Tide has been satisfied to sit back and coast on a small margin. Scoring early in every game, she was seldom threatened.
